BREED THEATER. The Fishermaid of Ballydavid, Sterling

Hundreds of delighted patrons wit-nessed the exclusively high grade pic-tures at the Breed last evening, and a nessed the exclusively high grade pictures at the Breed last evening, and a great many were unable to procure seats, and even an admission. The big crowd of good natured holiday shoppers, weary after the long-continued searching for Christmas gifts, found a charming resting spot at the Breed, and the very attractive features proved most entertaining.

The strong story of Irish life entitled The Fishermaid of Ballydavid found a responsive chord in the hearts of the audience, for every act of the pleasing and unsuspecting little Irish lass was followed closely, and it was evident her welfare was uppermost in the minds of the people, judging from the applause. The victure is a truly idyllic poem of the ragged coast of the Emerald Isle, depicting the humble life of the fishermen, with all of its dangers as well as its picturesque environments. The pretty lass is flattered and fascinated by the young broker's son, who is one of a party of tourists who visit her home. Despite her parents, she follows him to America and becomes lost in New York and is kindly taken to a warm home by a passing policeman. Later the youth who raused her to leave home hears of her presence in this country, and, finding her, explains to her that it was only a summer flirtation, and, paying her passage back to the old country, she a summer flirtation, and, paying her passage back to the old country, she departs a sadder but wiser girl, and the last we see of her is when she plods wearily up the old home lane, falling by the door of the thatched-loof cottage, where her broken hearted parents, now overcome with joy, find the penitent. The scenes abpard ship are among ne most beautiful of the season.

POLI'S. Woman Against Woman.

The change in the scale of prices has worked a material difference at Foll's popular theater. It meets with the approval of the public and has a tendency of drawing more patrons to the theater, which means a better production, as it is a fact that the members of any stock company give a better and more finished performance with a good audience. Last night a very enthusiastic audience witnessed a fine and meritorious production of Woman Against Woman. It has enough of heart interest and comedy to satisfy the most fastidious, while the general theme and plot is of such a nature that it kept the audience pleased throughout the entire production. But of those moving pictures, rothing better has ever been displayed on a screen in this city, the subjects are laughable to the extreme, and kept the audience in constant good humor.
